Friends at Mount Hermon,

Thank you for your cards and phone calls and for allowing us to use the Chapel for Monroe's service. I appreciate your thoughtfulness more than you know, Thelma Smith

Many thanks for your love, your prayers, your friendship. I love you friends at Mount Hermon and thank you for truly caring about me. See you soon. My love to all, Grace Keown

Quote for Today

The greatest risk you can take in your life is to risk nothing with your life... to live life in the kiddie pool... to live a safe life. Because then if you fail, it's embarrassing. And if you succeed, it's insulting to a God who had much bigger things in mind for your life. Failure is a possibility no matter what you do. So is success. I just know where I don't want to be when either one happens... the kiddie pool. – Steven Furtick

The True Bottom-Line...

A multi-millionaire found himself consumed with making more and more money while at the same time feeling quite depressed and unfulfilled. Many sessions with his therapist did not seem to alleviate his anxious compulsions for achieving wealth. Finally, his counselor told him to be sure to take time each day to wander around the local cemetery.

“Why in the world should I do that?” asked the millionaire.

“Because,” answered the therapist, “while you are there, you can tell yourself: ‘Someday, I’m going to be the richest guy under this ground!’”

Everything in life has a bottom line. And for every human being, the ultimate bottom-line is death. If we had an unlimited supply of days in this life, we would waste them. But since our days are limited, we are compelled to use them wisely and well!

Jesus said, “Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.” – Someday, all the material things we fret over will have rusted, rotted, or fallen apart. So why should we attach our hearts to such flimsy objects? This year, on April 15 (Tax Day) the government stakes its claim on our stuff. But on April 8 (Easter Sunday), God stakes His claim on our souls and invites us to join the risen Jesus in living for eternal values... today.

Blessings to you,
Lee
